A group of six students from Columbus School for Girls in Columbus, Ohio, jumped right into their teaching assignment last week. The students, part of CSG teacher Christine Murakami’s class, taught Julius E. Spruave School fourth graders how to create an animation program on XO laptops using the EToys computer language, developed by the One Laptop Per Child organization.